Upon further review! I think we need to leave the "encased" language IN. Because if the weapon is within arms reach is must be unloaded & encased. For the beyond arms reach, I talked to a DNR warden, the term for a crossbow is "uncocked" with no bolt "knocked" (in firing position on the string). For bows I guess it would be unstrung or with no arrow knocked if strung (compound bow), though at least with today's technology I believe that is the only practical option.

Would it perhaps make sense to add to the (1) (g) definition of "unloaded" the crossbow uncocked w/ no bolt knocked language. Daryl

This draft looks good for the guns & the unstrung bows on page 5 lines 16 to 18. The remaining problem is the compound bow or crossbow that can not be readily "unstrung". We have to allow an unstrung bow, but may need to get the "unloaded" concept to apply there also (no bolt or arrow may be in place or attached??, or something along those lines??). Daryl
